What is "RSVP"? What does this texting abbreviation stand for? Learn the definition, usage and other meanings for this internet acronym with interesting conversation examples and ESL infographic. RSVP Meaning When receiving an invitation or letter that says 'rsvp' you are expected to respond as to whether or not you plan on attending the event the invitation and/or letter speaks of. Origin of RSVP The expression 'rsvp' comes from the French phrase, 'Repondez s'il vous plait' and means 'please respond'. The proper way to decline an 'rsvp' is with a letter saying, 'I regret to inform you I must decline.' and/or 'RSVP, regrets only.' This is highly recommended for doing if you don't plan on attending the event. Most commonly an unanswered 'rsvp' is considered to be a simple way of accepting. Sending your regrets is the only true way to stop confusion if you don't plan on attending. Conversation Examples Here are some ways this internet slang word is used. Example 1: You receive a beautiful wedding invitation in the mail and after opening it you see that it says, 'Please RSVP'. Many will do this for weddings and large catered events to ensure they have plenty of food for everyone coming and if you don't respond back with a yes, more than likely you won't be welcomed at said event. Example 2: Texter 1: Hey did you send June an rsvp? Texter 2: No I changed my mind, Texter 1: Me too, but I still said I was going, Texter 2: Well sounds like you have to go, Texter 2: Or call her and get out of it. Here we have a couple of friends talking about a party and if they had told the host whether or not they were coming. An 'rsvp' wasn't sent to them, they are simply having a conversation asking each other if they had told the host they were coming or not and the fastest way to ask someone that question especially in a text would be, 'did you rsvp?'. Example 3 Company News Letter: Office party this weekend, all must RSVP by 8 pm. A simple letter sent to all employees telling them to say yes or no to attending the office party by no later than 8 pm. I just wanted to know what is the English full form of "RSVP", a word which we usually use on invitation cards? I read somewhere it's a French word. So I wanted to confirm if it has any English full form and if it does, what it is? I googled the same but didn't get the correct thing, so thought of asking here. 3 Log In / Register A small and beautiful envelope appears in your mailbox. It's certainly neither a bill nor junk mail. No, this letter is far more important. You're the lucky recipient of a wedding invitation. Whether it's gold-trimmed or adorned on scented paper, the intent is the same. Your friends or loved ones request your attendance on their special day. As you scan the page, one part leaps out: RSVP. RSVP is an abbreviation of the French phrase 'Repondez, s'il vous plait'. It translates to 'Respond, if you please' or, better still, 'Respond please.' When you tear open the invitation and get reading, you need to pay close attention to the RSVP section. Usually, this part of the invitation will be a separate card, which you will need to send back to the soon-to-be newlyweds. It may include additional information, such as meal options and the name of your plus-one. In some cases, there may be no card at all, just a mailing address or email address instead. In any case, you will need to write to the couple stating whether you plan to attend their wedding or otherwise. Responding to a wedding invitation is an absolute must, whether you intend to go or not. The chances are that the couple had to make some rather tricky decisions when creating the guest list. Put simply, every wedding guest costs. The price-per-head will always factor into the overall budget. So, the fact that you got invited may mean someone else did not. With that in mind, letting the couple know whether you will be attending is plain good manners. Should you not be able to make it, for whatever reason, they may be able to invite someone from their 'maybe' list. On the other hand, if you're planning to be a part of their special day, you need to let them know as soon as you can. Once you've RSVP-ed, there's nothing left to do but wait until the big day arrives. However, life is full of surprises. You may find that your plans change and you need to tell the couple that you can no longer attend their wedding. Handling this matter delicately is key. Keep in mind that they will have already made arrangements for you ahead of time. As soon as you know that your circumstances have changed, reach out to the couple. While you want to avoid an overly-complicated explanation, you should include a reason. You also want to include a sincere apology as part of this message. Be certain to tailor this letter or email to your circumstances and be as earnest as possible. Responding to wedding invitations promptly is polite. Much of the time, RSVP cards will include a line that tells you when you need to respond by. For instance, it may say "Please RSVP by May 31." That's a hard deadline but it doesn't mean that you can't answer faster. If you already know whether you can attend or not, go ahead and let the couple know. If you're struggling to find the right words, don't panic. There's a simple, standardized way to respond to a wedding invitation. Fortunately, you don't need to write an entire essay. Instead, keep things short and snappy. Here's an example of how you can reply if you are attending the couple's special day: Dear [Insert Couple's Names], We would like to accept with pleasure the kind invitation to your wedding on Saturday, July 25 at 1.00 PM. We gleefully look forward to the event. Kind wishes, [Insert Your Name(s)] While the above example works for most circumstances, you may want to jazz things up. If you're close to the couple in question or simply feel creative, you can add a splash of personality into your RSVP. See the following example: Dear [Insert Couple's Names], Thank you so much for including us in your wedding plans. We accept with pleasure the kind invitation to your wedding on Saturday, July 25 at 1.00 PM. We cannot wait to celebrate your big day with you! Kind wishes, [Insert Your Name(s)] That's all well and good, but what if you can't attend the wedding. The golden rule here is not to over-explain the situation. The most likely reason you can't make it is simply that you're busy. Nothing more, nothing less. Be sure to state that you have a prior engagement and wish the couple well. Here's a quick example: Dear [Insert Couple's Names], We would like to thank you for the kind invitation to your wedding on Saturday, July 25 at 1.00 PM. Regrettably, we will be unable to attend due to prior commitments. We wish you the best on your special day! Kind wishes, [Insert Your Name(s)] Needless to say, you may need to add more information to your personalized RSVP letter or message. If the couple has asked what meals you would like or for other details, you can include them here. Of course, you may also need to include the RSVP card and check the appropriate boxes too. Read the invitation fully and ensure that you follow the instructions down to the letter. Cite Hello we would like to know what the letters r.s.v.p. stand for.
